PARALYZED DOGS

We have a very good success rate with paralyzed dogs at Franklin Road   Animal Hospital. I learned a technique from Dr. Lynn Parker in   Charlotte, North Carolina when I left vet school in 1973 that was more   successful than the surgery that was being done at Auburn University. We are usually able to get a paralyzed dog up and walking again without   the major expenditures and trauma of surgery and in a short amount of   time. To my joy the animals are usually back functional much earlier   than the three weeks I normally project.

 Within the last few   years I have found that most of these dogs have underlying food   allergies that are causing their nutrition to be impaired. This poor   nutrition causes a lack of health of their discs which leads to a   functional prolapse and damage to the spinal cord. This bruising of the   spinal cord needs to be resolved as soon as possible. At F.R.A.H. we   normally determine chiropractically the location of the lesions which   are treated conventionally with DMSO, clinical steroids, and enzymes   depending on the longevity and severity of the impairment. Chiropractic   adjustments are often begun along with therapeutic ultrasound treatments and magnetic therapy. After the initial treatments,   supplementation to correct the deficiencies and underlying food   allergies are addressed along with the inflammatory conditions producing   the impairment of function. The role of prevention of future paralytic episodes is also strongly addressed.

If you live close to   Middle Tennessee we can treat your pet at the clinic, but if you are in Montana, Maine, or even Ireland, we can help with the allergies,   inflammation and prevention protocols by a holistic method and recommend   supplementations. You can get a chiropractor in your area to do   ultrasound therapy, chiropractic adjustments and pulsing magnetic   therapy to help turn the dog around.

If you live far away you   can phone or email us for instructions on how to provide the materials for us to   be able to do long distance care. (615) 377-6457 holisticpetcaretn@gmail.com
